Many failures in re-enforcing operations in the past! are attributable to the lack of specific recommendation of certain species as suitable for the work. No species is suitable for all localities and in a very real sense the problem of selection of species for re-enforcing is a local one, to be solved by a study of local conditions. Summary. In increasing the quantity and quality of the timber carried by our woodlots, the immediate work of the woodlot owner lies along the following lines: 1. Distinguishing clearly between the woodlot and the woodpasture, giving to the woodlot the necessary conditions for its growth and development. 2. A recognition of the characteristics of a good woodlot as shown both in its positive and negative characters. 3. An attempt to bring the present stand into these conditions by gradual improvement cuttings, which shall remove fungus and insect infested forms, misshapen trees and undesirable species. 4. To increase the density of the stand by causing new trees to start by some method adapted to the special conditions of his woodlot. 5. A careful selection of species under expert advice for the work of re-enforcement. 6. Persistent and intelligent effort along these lines until the desired result is secured. 7. To keep as his ideal of the woodlot one which carries the largest number of the best trees in proper proportions, and which reproduce themselves mo-t rapidly and more surely. Preliminary Studies in...
