Enrodte To New York Via Long Island Sound, Thursday, June 19, 1890. At last, after three months of delightful anticipation, barring the dread ordeal of parting from loved ones, I am on my way to Enrope. Nothing but the wildest desire, with the attendant excitement, could have nerved me for the good-bye at the depot, where a party of friends bade me a hearty bon voyage. My husband lightly kissed his hand to me and waved adieu as the train moved out of the Old Colony depot, and I--well, a great sob welled up in my throat, and, woman like, I cried. Consistency thou art a jewel in woman. Here I was deliberately leaving the best friend I ever had for a summer of pleasure and crying about it, with not a thought of giving it up. Having the faculty...
