Shaker Verlag Dez 2011, 2011. Taschenbuch. Condition: Neu. Neuware - Since the first days of the Internet the IP (Internet Protocol) traffic carried by network operators increased year after year. This was mainly caused by a continuous growth in the number of users having Internet access, combined with an increase in services that those users have access to using an IP infrastructure. Traditional telecommunication services that had their dedicated infrastructures (such as telephony, television) are in a process of gradually switching to IP. Two additional causes, which have led to the increase of network traffic are a constant need of users to have access to higher quality services, and, the pervasiveness of modern mobile devices, which allow users to be connected to the Internet anytime and from almost anywhere. Different studies of the evolution of Internet traffic show that on average, during the last decade, Internet traffic increased between 50% to 100% every year, depending on the markets where those studies have been made. Looking at the behavior of Internet users during recent years, and considering Internet services that are still very new, or expected to be available soon, leads to estimations that the trend in traffic increase will continue at the same rate until 2013 and most probably beyond. By 2012 the total Internet traffic carried by Internet providers is estimated to be about 75 times higher than the total traffic carried in 2002. Besides the impact that such a traffic increase has on the routing and switching infrastructure of network operators also the network monitoring and management mechanisms need to be changed in order to address more traffic. Traffic metering and analysis mechanisms will still be important in the hands of network operators, as these are the basis for many network management operations, such as network monitoring, planning,...
