Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Nos, Victuri, Salutamus It is true our earth is but a dot, yet our minds go out with an infinite grasping to the stars and the nebulae on the waves of the ether, in the measurement of its vibrations, much as we measure the forces along our nerves from the brain to the extremities. Having a moral system to which these and all other facts are subsidiary, it is proper that one who is about to live (victurus is the future participle of both ciro and vinco) should make his parting salutation. Steenrod, May 14th, 1884. The Crucial Life - - The Transition of Humanity. Bring cypress and myrtle to crown the Dead, The dying Present, and the Past With dust of ages on him cast, And the sere leaves of Autumn lately shed. Autumnal leaves in dying glory shed Shall turn to dust whence forth they came, Or go to make some future flame, Or flowers for spring-time, in their early bed. Time died yesterday, and to-day he lies In death, - and he, to-morrow dies Mid laughing sounds and wailing cries, - And not a soul could live unless he dies. Time is immortality, - and time is life; - Its changes are the mortal span That measure all the life of man, Which by the forces make his field of strife. Bring cypress and myrtle to crown the dead; Emblems of death, emblems of love! Whence come they; - beneath or above, - Dark shadows of Fate, or symbols of Jove? Bring cypress and myrtle to crown the dead, For from dying and living come About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes...
