Excerpt: .Then spoke the Ape: My lord, I love him, and have done so this long while, and I well bear in mind one great and good deed he did in your sight, for which you gave him thanks, though I dare say you think not of it at this far time. Let me bring it to your mind. Two years since there came to this Court a man and a snake to have a point of law heard, and to get a rule. It was in this wise: The snake broke through a hedge, when he was caught by the neck with a snare, so that there was no way to get free with his life. A man came by at the time, when the snake told him to help him in his ill luck. The man, who was kind at heart, felt for the mean thing, and said, If thou wilt swear not to do me hurt with thy tooth or sting I will let thee free. The snake of course said he would; so the man put his hand to the trap and let him loose. Then they went for a long way on the same road. In time the snake felt the pangs of want, and sprang on the man and sought to kill him; but he gave a jump out of his reach, and said, What dost thou mean? hast thou heed of thine oath? Quoth the snake, No; but...
