Forgotten Books, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****. Excerpt from Winstowe: A Novel So, with a withering reference to the state of household management that allowed of heathen dogs sitting on crimson-leather chairs, like Christians, Mrs. Bunting sailed out of the avenue, and Winstowe, its master, and the Pomeranian were left in peace and quietude. But we have wandered far from the cathedral porch, where Mr. Earle is still held a prisoner by the drifting snow. A louder burst of melody from the choristers voices within tells that the Gloria is being sung, and then there is a silence, broken at length by a voice close to Mr. Earle s elbow. They re a-readin now, sir. Mr. Earle gave a start, and turned quickly round. Then his eyes fell on a bundle of ragged clothes huddled together in the corner. He took off his spectacles, wiped them carefully with a bandanna handkerchief, and put them on again. Bless me! - why - it s a boy! He touched the bundle with the ferule of the green umbrella, and it got up and stood before him. Yes, it was a boy - a boy with a little, pinched, wizened face, and large wistful eyes, that looked both sad and hungry, and as if they were quite used to being both. In his hands he held a flower-pot, containing a plant, which he had tried to shelter by drawing round it the flap of his tattered jacket; his little feet were bare, and blue with cold, and curled up every now and then, as if shrinking from contact with the floor. Dear, dear! said the old gentleman, looking up and down, and down and up, the small figure that stood before him, how...
