Excerpt: .waters gleaming From Massac s overflow. From bottoms far before us Oft comes a jar of notes, A vast amphibian chorus That swells from rasping throats; And while I hear the splashing Of watery pools and springs, Among the tree-tops flashing I see emblazoned wings. Each tree that poses dreamlike, Now, breeze-awakened stands; They lean and sway and seem like Engaged in shaking hands; While skies with light clouds pendent High o er the forest-wall, With blue the most resplendent, Are arching over all. I gazed with raptured feeling Long on the sylvan scene, So beauteous and appealing Appeared the country-green. Up rose fair hopes enchanting My senses for the time; I found my young heart panting To breathe a thought in rhyme. With instinct as a leader, Although of tender age, I had searched my little reader For each poetic page; And no offense committing, I thought the page of rhyme Or poesy more befitting, Possessed of pleasing chime. So under this condition, For better or for worse, I wrote my composition In simple, childlike verse; And when I stood before her And read my poem there, A roseate blush flushed o er her That made her twice as fair. Come here! she said excited, Come here! I give you this! Pressed on my lips delighted, A woman s fervent kiss! Her love the more to show it, She added, bless her heart, You are my little poet, I claim you from the...
