O ye Atrides, and all other brave confederate warriors, To you may the gods be propitious, and all successful your efforts Yon proud city to capture, and prosperous be your return home. But for my own lost child, for my daughter reject not a ransom, And as in piety bound respect far-darting Apollo. He said; and the warlike chiefs appear d to be all of the same mind, That grace should be shown to the priest, and his ransoming gifts be accepted; Not so the King Agamemnon, but he the prerogative claiming, Sternly the priest dismiss d, and a threatening speech superadded Let me not find you again, old man, nor hear of your coming If here loitering found, whether now or hereafter returning, Neither the chaplets nor sceptre you bring may avail to protect you. The maiden I let not go, nor abandon my right to my captive; Here in my tent she remains, in my palace at Argos hereafter, The loom her employment by day, and at night to my bed to attend me. But go, seek not delay, and no further provoke me to anger. He said and with fear and confusion the priest from his presence retreated; Silent he went and alone to the shore of the...
