Bob Lujano captured the nation s attention in 1979. For seventeen years, the headlines between Kansas, Texas, Tennessee, and across state lines through the National Enquirer sounded the same no matter the year or the paper: . .achieves goals despite disability.middle name is courage.gutsy kid beats odds. Not because he contracted meningococemia and survived, but because of his response. After suffering abuse, abandonment, and four amputations at the age of nine, Bob Lujano requested to remain alive. In a coma clinging to life, Lujano, wrapped like a mummy, sat up. A visitor stood at the end of his bed and gave him the choice to live or go to heaven. Lujano gave an unthinkable answer: I don t care what state my body is in. I want to live. I have things to do. His decision was granted. From that day on, he fought to live a full life of independence like everyone else. Day after day he painstakingly proved those headlines by enrolling in normal schools, learning to drive, landing a career, gaining financial and physical independence, dating, and eventually prevailing at the international level in quad rugby as a bronze-medal Paralympian. In fact, Lujano does not consider himself to be disabled because he is able to live life on his own terms. In an age where image is everything and people are discounted for the way they look, Lujano crashes stereotypes and demands the reader to live their life with everything they ve got. This inspirational tale of redemption is no woe-is-me story; Lujano chooses gratitude in the fact that he GETS to live and invites others to do the same.
