HOPE AND THE APPROACHING APOCALYPSE: SUSTAINED BY PROPHECY AND SCIENCE (HARDBACK)

Parson s Porch, 2016. Hardback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Do faith and science prove or indicate that there is something to all of the attention surrounding the apocalyptic clamor? I m sure that many of us are wondering why so many people are obsessed with the apocalypse. We not only see cable documentaries and movies about the apocalypse, but we also hear about it at church and through other associations. By now, everyone has heard about preppers; even FEMA is preparing in a big way. Is it a fade or is there something to it? The obsession seems to be with not just one group or religion, but it includes a variety of people and ages. About four years ago, I was shopping at a large chain discount store. A young man in his twenties started talking to me about prepping. It seemed that his belief in the coming apocalypse had to do more with being prepared for a nationwide or worldwide catastrophe. He was preparing with several other young people and an older man, who owned a shelter in the country. They were gathering food, water, medical supplies and weapons among other things. One cable documentary interviewed a young, prepper woman, who concentrated on physical fitness and a bug-out system in a big city, because she felt civil chaos would take place due to a global oil shortage. I would think that a dedicated prepper wouldn t be living in a big city! Believers in the soon coming apocalypse also seem to be from diverse educational and financial backgrounds. A good example of diversity is my own brother, Dr. Richard Clark, who has his own practice and is affiliated with a prestigious medical school. It might be of no surprise...
