Excerpt: . be familiar to all who have read his Lapland Tour. The great botanist, after noticing the strange fact that although four persons partook of this terrible compound, none of them seemed one penny the worse, remarks that the active firinciple in the aconite, as in most of the Ranuncuaceae, is extremely volatile, and dispersed in a great measure by heat. Doubtless this is likewise the case in the hemlock, although it belongs to a different natural order. The arum (Arum maculatam) furnishes us with another example. It is exceedingly poisonous, yet Portland sago is made from it: repeated washings, and then the agency of heat, deprives the powder prepared from its roots of all acrimony. Depend on it--Every green herb, from the lotus to the darnel. Is rich with delicate aids to help incurious man. I asked, when told of the notice in...
