Howard: In the Senate of the United States, January, 1864* Mr. Howard. Mr. President. I deeply regret that a sense of duty as a member of this body should require me to act the part I am about to act in reference to the Senator from Kentucky. I have known him for more than twenty years. I had the pleasure to be associated with him as a member of the Twenty-Seventh Congress, and during that turbulent and agitating period had occasion very frequently to admire his frankness, his patriotism, and his devotions to his principles - principles in which I sincerely sympathized with him. We were both acting in promotion of the same political objects, both in the same political party, and I confess, sir, that when I look back upon those ancient scenes, my feelings are hurt to be obliged to throw myself into a position of antagonism to him who was then my friend and political associate. But for all this, sir, he must pardon me, at least excuse me; I feel that there is a duty due from me to this body and to the country, and that duty impels me to take a somewhat particular notice of the series of resolutions offered by the Senator from Kentucky, which form the foundation of the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts for his expulsion. On the 5th of January, the honorable Senator from Kentucky presented to this body a series of very singular resolutions, and asked the Senate to order them to be printed. The Senate made the order. They, were printed at the public expense, and are...
