The persons brain was entirely surrounded by a complex neural net that translated the brains electrical impulses into robot controls and vice versa. These Model 10s proved to be vastly superior fighters than normal humans. Now she had her army of powerful robots. Mintas army consisted of these bloodthirsty model 10s, a host of Model 6 workers, and Model 12 throw-away fighter robots, roughly as strong as a human male. Dirt cheap to make, they slavishly followed orders. By 1480, the ten millionth Model 12 rolled off the assembly line. Minta organized her squadrons into one Model 10 in command of one hundred Model 12s. Her generals, Minta-0 through Minta-9 each commanded ten thousand squadrons, that is over a million robot fighters very impressive numbers until one took into account their warships, which consisted of the single-man fighters with their small cannon and backup, deep space transports with a much larger cannon. That is, Minta had no battleships, heavy cruisers, or light cruisers, at least initially. She attacked Zeta Scorpii-C first, capturing...
