Excerpt from The Anatomist s Instructor, and Museum Companion: Being Practical Directions for the Formation and Subsequent Management of Anatomical Museums A careful perusal of this publication will, I sincerely trust, enable the student to benefit much more than hitherto to from attending lectures, whether of Anatomy or Phy siology, and more especially Pathology. In visiting mu scums, I am perfectly satisfied (notwithstanding all that is said to the contrary), that the student has hitherto de rived little or no advantage; to him they are, in fact, sealed books. Lectures on Anatomy are, or should be, perfectly finished demonstrations, combining as many illustrations or proofs as is possible, of the facts more 1m mediately under the lecturer s consideration. There can be, I presume, but one Opinion of the importance of mu scums to a teacher. It is a fact that Dr Barclay (the most successful teacher that ever lived) demonstrated the arterial and venous system solely from dry prepara tions. Many Objections have been urged against this practice; and although I admit that it is highly objec tionable, yet it seems to me the best which can be adopt ed, considering the extremely limited period to which the course of anatomy is confined, and more particularly du ring the existing regulations regarding dissection. A perusal of the following pages will also explain to the student the true nature of vascular preparations; and, being put on his guard as to the faults and imperfections under which they labour, the beginner even may study them with comparative safety.
