Excerpt: .forgives us our past sins by the merits of Christ s perfect sacrifice. Much as there is in this mystery of Atonement which we cannot fathom, the offer of God there made to us is practically plain. If a man come before God in penitence for his sins and with faith in Jesus, God will forgive him his sins--that is, will not impute them to him or will reckon them as if they did not exist. But does God then make believe ? The sins are real acts of the man; they still, though he repent of them, belong to his character. How can God, Who is the True, reckon them as if they were not? I answer, because God sees us and deals with us not as we are, but as we are becoming. The truest judgment of any person or thing is one which takes into account what he or it is to become. Why do I buy a cutting of a valuable plant, though it be but a little bit of stick, at a high price? Because of what it is going to become. So it is that God reckons the penitent and believing sinner at what he is going to become. At present he is not righteous, but his penitence and faith are the seed of a full righteousness yet to grow in him. But perhaps, you say, it will not grow. What then? Ah, yes, alas! Perhaps it will...
