Excerpt from Metrics to Evaluate R and D Groups: Phase I, Qualitative Interviews In 1990, in the us. Alone, private corporations spent over 70 billion on research and development This was approximately of total sales and of total profits. Similar spending occurred in Japan (over 27 billion) and Germany (over 19 billion). In order to justify investments of this magnitude, private industry must believe that the return on investment (roi) for r and d exceeds the firms targets. However, investments in r and d are inherently difficult to evaluate. While the costs are clearly visible and are recorded as they incur, the return on r and d investment may occur many years in the future and may be hard to attribute to a specific project. This is particularly true if r and d develops a strategic technical competence that is applied across many projects and pervades everything that the organization does. Furthermore, decisions on which projects to fund or which strategic competence to pursue must be made under considerable market uncertainty in technology uncertainty. Our long-term goal is to understand how best to allocate...
