Dear Sir, I send, as you request, the particulars of the anecdote of John Lashford, and the question of the fish; but I should have sent it more readily before the Memoir of that interesting youth had made its first appearance, for after reading what you have said, and said most justly, of him, I feel that such trifles as the one alluded to will be little else than a profanation of your pages. Nothing had I known of John Lashford before, when on a visit to the Asylum, after witnessing his proficiency in arithmetic, his peculiarly delightful smile (for peculiar indeed it was) led me to indulge in an act of pleasantry towards him; and I proposed to him a question, with which probably many of your readers are acquainted, with the promise that the solution of it by my next visit should receive the premium of one shilling. (The question is this: --Suppose the head of a fish to be nine inches; the tail as long as head and half the body; the body as long as the head and tail together: what is the length of the fish) At my next visit, the smile which hailed me was followed by a shake of the head, to signify that he had...
