Excerpt from Blue Hens Chickens Cook Book The Peninsula which lies between the Delaware and Chesapeake Bays and is composed of the Eastern Shore of Maryland, Delaware, and a little bit of Virginia, has for two hundred years been famous the world over for the lusciousness of its viands and the excellence of its cooking. The recipes which tickled the palates of the Colonial planters and their visitors, and first earned for the Peninsula its fame for the highest development in the art of cooking, have descended with the family plate to the heirs of those old planters; nor has the art of the Colonial housekeeper been lost; but rather has it been refined and adapted to modern conditions and culinary appliances. Many of the recipes have been handed down from mother to daughter, and to grand-daughter among the women of the Peninsula and are as highly prized by them as their family plate and Colonial furniture. These recipes were gathered by the ladies of The Milford New Century Club; and all were thoroughly tested before their approval. Only persons well-known for their...
