Excerpt: .You are sorry, I see, to have grieved me. There s a kiss; don t fret. No, mamma, you must not kiss me; I don t deserve it. I pushed out the flower-pot on purpose. Ha! and why? said my father, walking up. Mrs. Primmins trembled like a leaf. For fun! said I, hanging my he ad-- just to see how you d look, papa; and that s the truth of it. Now beat me, do beat me. My father threw his book fifty yards off, stooped down and caught me to his breast. Boy, he said, you have done wrong: you shall repair it by remembering all your life that your father blessed God for giving him a son who spoke truth in spite of fear. Oh, Mrs. Primming, the next fable of this kind you try to teach him, we part for...
