Excerpt: . her eyes glanced round the room, and rested complacently on the glow a frosty sunset diffused over the yellow hangings, the tables piled up with Sevres and Nankin china, Hindoo idols and apanese figures, carvings and bronzes, antique cabinets filled with coins, spindle-legged consoles ranged against the walls, and smaller ornaments. The pictures behind, standing forth in a blaze of light--- St. Sebastian prominent in a ruddy haze, --a portrait, said to be by Rembrandt, of a golden brown, --and Dutch landscapes, with luminous points upon tree and stream, calling up an ideal world of warmth and summer, to which the soft, penetrating odour of rose-leaves, in large blue and white pots, came as a fitting atmosphere. You seem very comfortable here, was her remark, as her eye ranged round. Really cosy and comfortable. I only hope it will last. A sigh was the...
