By J P Simonds

Forgotten Books, United States, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****. Excerpt from Studies in Bacillus Welchii, With Special Reference to Classification and to Its Relation to Diarrhea The group characteristics of these bacteria are the following: They are large, anthrax-like, Gram-positive, non-motile, anaerobic bacilli with slightly rounded ends, usually occurring singly or in pairs, rarely in short chains. Spore formation is inconstant and occurs only in alkaline media, never in pure cultures in media containing a fermentable sugar or free acid. They bring about the stormy fermentation of milk; that is, the milk is quickly coagulated and gas formation is so abundant as to break up the curd and often to force parts of it above the cream ring. In milk cultures the odor of butyric acid is evident. Plain and sugar-free gelatin is liquefied very slowly or not at all. A rabbit injected intravenously with this organism, killed within two or three minutes and incubated, presents in twenty four hours a body enormously distended with gas which will burn with a pale blue flame.
