Mike Temple is a top executive in the defense industry. He is happily married and respected by his peers and the politicians he has worked with on his company's behalf. On the day he is asked to join Jimmy Carter's administration as the secretary of defense, Mike receives a mysterious letter from Korea where his defense industry career began. The letter begins with Dear American Father. . .and what Mike learns from the letter changes his life forever. In her letter, Victoria, Mike's Amerasian daughter, begs him to save her from the disturbing plans her mother, Yun-Jin, has for her. Victoria wants to come to America. The letter jars Mike's memory about the years he spent in Korea and the Korean woman he fell for. . but not hard enough to marry her. After creating a temporary rift in his marriage when he reveals the news about the daughter he didn't know he had, Mike returns to Korea with the blessings of his wife, MaryAnn. Before his departure, the couple agreed that Mike should do whatever it takes to bring Victoria to the States. Once in Korea, Mike came face-to-face with the scorned Yun-Jin. Their relationship had ended abruptly when Mike was transferred by to the States by his company. While Yun-Jin had been vocal about her desire to marry Mike when they were a couple, Mike had been mum about his ambivalent feelings for Yun-Jin, and the strong desire he continued to carry for MaryAnn, his high school sweetheart, even though they'd ended their relationship before he left for Korea. Mike endured Yun-Jin's wrath and submitted to her financial demands in order...
