Nsemia Inc., United States, 2011. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 201 x 127 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Releasing My Critical Chatter: An autobiographical Narrative from the Black Diaspora is a first person narrative of the author s daily experiences as a woman of African heritage living in the Black Diaspora. Drawing on Black feminist thought and critical education theories, she theorizes through experiences of racism and sexism in her daily life as a child, a student, a mother, and a government employee. She presents her critical chatter, her autobiographical testimonial, through poetry and prose and through a series of moments that illustrate how racism and sexism are embedded in her everyday life. She connects personal individual experiences to systemic and institutional practices of colonialism and patriarchy. She further explores the contradictions, questions and struggle that doing this work brings, and the implications for curriculum and pedagogy in schools and classrooms. The author s testimonial is an act toward social transformation of the spaces and places in which we work and live. What others say: This chatter is a revelation. It unmask experiences catalogued as belonging to another time, another place.It cracks white-coloured glasses and illuminates an unacceptably flawed, external lexicon. - Michelle Davidson, Instructional Designer An insightful study of many things associated with discrimination, including polite racism and invisibility the moments and their analyses are a powerful tool which draw the reader in as a participant, resulting in intricate self-reflection. - Carolyn Gammon, Author, and Guide Destination Manager An affirmation of the adage that it is the wearer of the shoe that knows where it pinches , and an expose of many falsehoods pertaining to the systemic coloured perception of others, - Matunda Nyanchama, ICT Professional Publisher.
