Otago University Press, New Zealand, 2014. Paperback. Condition: New. UK ed.. Language: English . Brand New Book. A raft of New Zealand writers and artists diagnose vital signs in this volume of Landfall. From the slogan on a T-shirt in Mexico, to the moon rising over a flag in Turkey, to haunting evidence of menace and mystery in the Marlborough Sounds, Landfall 227 traverses narratives, identities, and cultures to offer vital engagement with the best and the most promising of new New Zealand writing. Vital signs is a medical term that refers to the body's health and well-being, as evidenced by heart rate, respiration, reflexes, and body temperature. A suite of new paintings by Mark Braunias humorously teases out the visceral aspect of the human condition, while a portfolio of color photographs by Peter Black contemplates the healing beauty of landscape. The emotional personal associations of significant names - from Charles Dickens's Lizzie Hexam to the biblical Solomon - are explored by Nicholas Reid and Murray Edmond, while Martin Rumsby and Clare Orchard probe the loaded language of modern communication, from Facebook to video games. The magic of names also preoccupies Bernadette Hall in an excerpt from a long experimental poem. Other featured poets include James Norcliffe and Angela Andrews, and there is new fiction by Michelanne Forster, Tracey Slaughter, and Chad Taylor, among others. An extensive essay section is devoted to memoirs, ranging from one writer's memories of her father and commemorating Anzac Day, to another's account of growing up as a child of parents who ran an Auckland fruit and vege shop in the golden age of the 1950s, to an essayist's eloquent anecdotes, reminiscences, and analysis of the coup culture in Fiji. Poet Gregory O'Brien and geographer Robin Kearns discuss a...
