Childish Erki has just discovered the khoirey, magical beings who rebelled in a long past age and who must now perform labors for the good of humankind. But, a plague strikes the Oldenburg, Erki's native city, and many, including his older brother, are suddenly dying. So, believing himself the fulfillment of a prophesy only implied in some old writings and by the words of a stranger, Erki embarks on a quest to find an antidote for the plague that is killing his brother and destroying his beloved city. The Blue Witch and her minions, the skarlinga, along with other wielders of dark spells, are standing in the way of Erki's quest. Will his wits and the imperfect majik of the khoirey be enough to see Erki through beast-haunted woods, dank caverns, and hidden, perilous realms in search of the fabled cure for the plague, something called mrinta, something that seems more hearsay than real? This is a story about friendship, love, loss, selflessness, and the impossibility of going home again unchanged. This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
