Not illustrated. 1885 Excerpt: . . . so simple that it does not require further explanation. We have now to find the shadow of a o upon the interior surfaces of the slabs. Imagine the inner vertical plane of slab (a c) produced to meet the vertical plane parallel to picture passing through the gas-flame at A3 A3; then, because A A3 is parallel to the line a o and meets the plane of inner surface of slab (a c) at A3, the shadow of a o upon this vertical plane, has its vanishing point at A3. Through a draw a b to A3, and because a o is parallel to the upper surface of the horizontal slab, the remainder of its shadow is drawn from b parallel to a o. 5th. Required the shadow of the door, which is opened at a given angle, upon the floor and wall of room. The upright edge of door has the vanishing point of its shadow upon the floor at A. Draw a right line from f to A. In order to find the vanishing point of the shadow of the upper edge of door upon the surface of the wall, wo must imagine a vertical plane passing through the gas-flame and the vanishing point of the line whose shadow is required, and where this plane intersects the plane of the wall we shall have the vanishing point of the shadow. The above mentioned plane intersects the floor in the chain-line drawn from A to...
