Excerpt: .his parents were also members; he was active and doubtless sincere in the religious work of his church and city. I.le married most satisfactorily, and his attractive home was, with the son born to him, all he could desire. His crime was forgery, by which he ruined himself, his own and his father s family. After his crime, previous to detection, he addressed, on a religious topic. hundreds of prisoners in the local prison of his city. His sincerity on this occasion was never doubted, and subsequent study of his character is convincing that he could be sincerely religious and at the same time a scoundrel, without himself perceiving the incongrnity. Another inatance.-- H. A man 30 or more years of age--a German, educated and accomplished in music and military matters, of attractive personal appearance, polite, obliging, generous, and sincere. He is not dissipated,...
