Atomic-Scale Modification of Electronic Materials PM Campbell 64.15.25.32 The demonstrated ability of scanning proximal probes to image and manipulate single atoms on a surface has created a unique opportunity to modify the properties of electronic materials with unprecedented degree of control. The goal of this research is to use proximal probes such as scanning tunneling microscopy (STM) and atomic force microscopy (AFM) to manipulate and engineer semiconductor structures at the nanometer and atomic scales. Special emphasis will be placed on fabricating low-dimensional structures in the size regime in which the effect of single electronic charges will dominate. The electronic and optical properties of such structures are expected to manifest a wide range of new effects, which will be interesting to basic physics and which may be useful for creating new classes of electronic devices. Available resources include...
