By Mancunian Mancunian

Forgotten Books, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The Freedom of Commerce in War Argument: Unassisted no navy can guarantee our oversea supplies - Mr. Churchill s admission - The need of other protection than a navy can give - Why the Admiralty s plan of arming merchantmen will not work - The alternative. To all nations the sea may be a path to power and fame; to England alone it is the means of existence. If her communications oversea are severed for a sufficient length of time, her merchants, manufacturers, professional men and workmen are as helpless for a living as fishermen kept ashore by a storm; she is not only defeated but she starves. Every Englishman knows that he lives by the sea, and he has also been taught to think that he lives by the navy. But the two propositions are not identical. The fisherman, for example, lives by the sea, but his best protection in his calling is not the navy, but the old rule of international law, which forbids attacks on his craft. In this respect he is better off than the rest of...
