Rev. C. H. Edgar, D. D.: Reverend and dear sir: Your able, touching and eloquent discourse upon the National Fast Day, was listened to with deep interest and great satisfaction by those present. The undersigned, believing that its circulation would do good, respectfully ask the favor of having the manuscript for publication. This sermon is given to the press in response to the foregoing note. And all Judah and Jerusalem mourned for Josiah. - 2 Chronicles xxxv.24. The mourning for Josiah was so spontaneous, so sincere, and so general, that, for a long time after, it was spoken of as unprecedented and never equalled. From that time until now - nearly three and twenty centuries, no ruler was ever so lamented as the simple-hearted, honest, young and sturdy Josiah, - the God-fearing, patriotic, great reformer. His character and work have in our day found a parallel, and the mourning of which our text speaks has been surpassed. We do not assert that a greater and a better role has lately passed away from among us - caught up like Elijah in a chariot of fire, but we dare say the grief is as sincere, and the mourning far more widely extended. Not intimating the least detraction from the merits of the reformation by the good King Josiah, we honestly believe that larger numbers will be benefitted, and more marked and permanent results for good will take date with the administration...
