Excerpt from A Comprehensive Plan of Insurance and Annuities for College Teachers The study here presented as Bulletin Number Nine of the Carnegie Foundation aims to describe a comprehensive plan of Insurance and Pensions adapted to the needs and resources of college teachers, and to point out at the same time the fundamental principles upon which any pension system must rest if it is to be permanent, secure, and within reasonable cost. While the report is issued by the authority of the trustees of the Foundation, they have not yet adopted the plan, and will not take up its consideration until near the end of the present year. The report was first sent, by the direction of the trustees, to the teachers and trustees of the colleges associated with the Foundation for their criticism and discussion. The paper is, however, of like concern to all teachers and trustees of American and Canadian colleges, since its primary object is to construct a relief system available to the great body of college teachers. The study is therefore offered in the present form in the interest of the teachers and trustees in the colleges throughout the United States, Canada, and Newfoundland. The point of view from which the problem has been approached is. What form of relief system will meet the needs of college teachers It seems clear that this is the point of view from which the problem ought to be approached. But any solution must take into account not only the interests of the teacher but those of his employer - the college corporation - and also those of the general public. The teacher, the college, and the public are alike interested in a...
