Excerpt: .to the distance of the eye; and if this distance were exceedingly increased. the whole stratum might at last be drawn together into a lucid spot of any shape, according to the position, length and height of the stratum. In order to determine those points, Sir W. Herschel put in practice a method which he calls gaging the heavens, which consists in repeatedly counting the number of stars in the fields of view very near each other, by which he obtained I THE MILKY WAY. mean of the number of stars in that part of the heavens. He then proceeds on the supposition deduces the length of his visual ray, or the distance through which his telescope had penetrated, or, in other words, the distance of the remotest stars in that particular region of the heavens. To illustrate this, let us suppose...
