Not illustrated. 1889 Excerpt: .hence derive the integral $ys = (a, ft 1 + a + 0-y, l-)$. A comparison of this integral with yx or $F(a, ft y,)$ shows that from any integral expressed by a hypergeometric series we can derive another integral of the same equation by making the above-mentioned change in the third element, and at the same time changing the fourth or variable element to what may be called its complement, that is, the result of subtracting it from unity. The process applies equally well to an integral of the form $y = . wv$, where v is a hypergeometric series; for a new integral of the equation for v gives a new integral of the equation for y . Thus the integrals $y- yv$ and yA would lead to the three new integrals $yv y6$, and $y8$) which will be found in a subsequent article. XVI. CHANGE...
