The records of the dealings of God with His ancient covenant, yet wayward people, is but one extended parable, representing the nature of his intercourse with all the sinful race of man. Aside from the primary design present to the divine mind, when Abram was called to be the father of a race, chosen as the repository of His truth, and the channel of its transmission to remote ages, we may surely discover, as a secondary purpose of great importance, that, in all the various events of their history, their triumphs and defeats, their prosperity and adversity, their glory and their shame, God intends to teach us, as by a parable, the great truth that his blessing rests...
