IN THE DIM VOID: SAMUEL BECKETTS LATE TRILOGY: COMPANY, ILL SEEN ILL SAID AND WORSTWARD HO BY GREGORY JOHNS Revised and updated, with new illustrations This book considers Samuel Becketts 1980-83 trilogy of short texts, Company, Ill Seen Ill Said and Wortstward Ho, otherwise known as the Company or Nohow Trilogy, published not long before Becketts death in 1988. These are dense, complex, allusive, highly lyrical and emotional pieces which contain many of Becketts key philosophies and approaches to writing. Includes photographs of Samuel Beckett and his plays, and a bibliography. ISBN 9781861712974. This new edition has been completely revised. Also available in hardback. www.crmoon.com EXTRACT FROM CHAPTER ONE The emotional core of Company is a nostalgic yearning, manifested in those vignettes or memories, which some see as having correlations with Becketts own life, so that Company is the closest thing in the Beckett canon to autobiography. Certainly many of the sections in Company have the whiff of autobiography, but these are memories mediated, edited, shaped, compressed and transformed by Samuel Becketts various voices. For in Company we find a narrator, a voice, a remembering self, in fact a complex hierarchy of various levels of consciousness and self-consciousness. Some of the passages are Beckett at his most lyrical, his most self-indulgently lyrical, one might add, for no sooner is lyricism evoked than it is stamped out. Ornamental writing is detested by Beckett, yet he can be as poetic in the ecstatic sense as any other poet. Here is a powerful sequence from Company: the light there was then. On your back in the dark the light there was then. Sunless cloudless brightness. You slip away at break of day and climb to your hiding place...
