SENTIMENTAL STUDIES: STORIES OF LIFE AND LOVE (CLASSIC REPRINT)

Forgotten Books. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 36 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.1in. Excerpt from Sentimental Studies: Stories of Life and Love You, perhaps, have never taken a walk down Thompson Street right round the corner of Washington Square and, therefore, are not familiar with the row of a dozen or more small wooden houses which the irony of fate has left there among brick mansions and tenement buildings, a stones throw away from the thundering Elevated; a sad memento of the Greenwich Village of yore. But if you ever strolled past these houses you must have noticed the one whose door was painted white, which looked so clean amidst the ugliness of a neglected side street. Its windows shon in the sun; a couple of geraniums were on the window sill, and white muslin curtains swinging rythmically with the blowing wind permitted now and then a peep into the rooms. The sidewalk was always well swept, and most likely a baby carriage would be standing before the open house door; a white baby carriage with netting spread all over it, a fat little baby slumbering peacefully in it, or playing with its tiny feet, searching with big black eyes for its mother. Often when I passed the little house I felt happy because there was such an idyll in this noisy side street. And we all are glad to see love in a little white cottage with a baby carriage standing in front of the door. It is one of the tragedies of a big city that we live next to people who could be our friends and whose friends we could be, but whom we never meet. We pass them daily; a change in the familiar surroundings would cause us to wonder and be...
