AFTER County Councils were created by the Local Government Act of 1888 I stood for County Councillor for the Wellesbourne division; and though squarsons and squires, landlords and moneybags, were leagued together against me, I was returned by a majority of thirty-four. My opponent was Mr. Cove Jones, a magistrate, who of course had great influence behind him. He had carriages at his service, I had Shanks s mare ; he had the Primrose League to work for him, I had a few trusty friends to speak for me. I did not canvass; I merely addressd three meetings from the distance of the platform. After the victory I received many kind letters which were as balm to me, for I had to submit to a regular torrent of scurrilous abuse from enemies and false friends. It was a bitter experience. Many of them were so prejudiced against me, and looked at all my doings with such jaundiced eyes, that I gave up trying to right myself with them. I was not going to play the part of the miller in the fable and I consoled myself by saying, Never mind; fierce is the light that beats upon a prominent man, and many are the clods of mud pitched at him. Go ahead as before, and let snarling dogs snarl and bark till they bark their bark away; they ll only hurt themselves most in the...
