Breathing spaces: Environmental portraits of Durban s industrial south (Paperback)

By Marijke Du Toit, Jenny Gordon

University of KwaZulu-Natal Press, South Africa, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. This is a book of environmental portraits, composed of photographs taken in the first decade of the twenty-first century, a few years after South Africa s transition to constitutional democracy. It explores how photographic images can move us, can unlock personal and shared memories, can prompt public debate, can unsettle us and challenge us to think about alternative environmental futures. The photographs in Breathing Spaces explore the relationship between people and three neighbourhoods located south of Durban harbour: Wentworth, Merebank and Lamontville. Durban s densely populated southern basin is well known as a flashpoint of pollution perpetrated by South African industries and transnational petrochemical corporations. It is also known for the conflict over plans for further, dirty economic growth. Breathing Spaces presents portraits of people and living spaces taken by social documentary photographer Jenny Gordon. These are interleaved with reproductions of images from family albums and are variously accompanied by extracts from Marijke du Toit s conversations with the people portrayed, their friends, family and neighbours. A selection of photographs taken by local residents who participated in photographic workshops and exhibitions, held in the particular neighbourhoods,...
