Brand New Book  Print on Demand .A Steampunk Fantasy Novel-The story of a Leonardo da Vinci airship that could have changed history! AUTHOR S PREFACE In 2011, in the Swiss Alpine village of Appenzell, a local banker, Messr. Didier Allenbach, inherited the meager estate of his uncle, Peter Gunld Gensler. The estate consisted of little more than a moldering trunk full of antique books which had been found in the old man s attic. Among these works was a small antique diary belonging to a distant relative by the name of Lukas Fluck. Apparently Messr. Gensler had never bothered to read the diary as it was scripted in a long forgotten, Italian provincial dialect. Didier Allenbach, however (working on a hunch), took the diary to a linguistic specialist who proceeded to translate one of the most astounding tales in history. Essentially, the story was a firsthand account by first mate Lukas Fluck that may be summarized as follows: In 1478 King Louis XI of France commissioned 26 year old Leonardo da Vinci to build a trade vehicle capable of traveling the quickest and most direct route from Naples to Paris-a machine not only capable of traversing land, sea, and air, but also able to withstand assault from marauding armies, pernicious sorcerers, and nature s fury. In light of existing technology, it was an impossible task. Leonardo however-desperate to establish his fame and fortune-accepted the challenge with youthful vigor. He not only built the craft, but set out to prove its merit by commanding its crew the entire length of the designated route. The whole affair ended in utter disaster. Still, the trade vehicle Leonardo invented was arguably his most brilliant creation. It was described in minute detail in one...
